"Though the subject is treated by most of the commentators, it is rarely noticed that Abu'l Fath al-Shahrastani uses an alternative name for his Book: Kitab al-Milal wa al-Nihal, meaning that he named it by using the word nihal Mansur al-Hallaj (d. May 6, 922/1418) was the great mystic poet and philosopher of Baghdad during the first half of the tenth century. It is reputed that al-Hallaj's poetry was so remarkable that he had to publish a book to codify his collected works of poetry so that they could be safely delivered to the Library of Baghdad and 'Abd al-Karim al-Shahrastani al-Sha'ari (d. May 5, 548/1153) was a Muslim rationalist, theologian, and theologian, particularly noted for his Kitab al-Milal wal Nihal (The Book of Sects and Creeds), a monumental work on theological thought. He was one of the early Arab theological thinkers and theologians to view Islam as a whole, not just a method of salvation, and who taught that it was possible to lose as well as gain wisdom. The method of questioning the authority of religious institutions is one of his major contributions to Islamic thought. In later life Shahrastani was accused of being a heretic, and his main work, the Kitab al-Milal wa-l-Nihal, was suppressed. Shahrastani was also influential in the development of the Hanbali tradition. He defined the majority of the common beliefs, such as the existence of predestination and free will in Islam, and even appealed to the Qur'an for his claims. However, during the Umayyad period in which he lived, he belonged to the opposition to the innovators and was 'Abd al-Karim al-Shahrastani al-Sha'ari. A critical study of his treatise Kitab al-Milal wa-l-Nihal (The Book of Sects and Creeds) which is an encyclopedic study of theological thought, aimed at the author's contemporaries in Baghdad and Damascus during the years of his life. .Khilafat al-khilafa wa al-zuhd wa al-jahl wa al-mithal (Conversion of the Caliphate to the uniform party

The aim of this study is to investigate the apoptotic effects of human leukocyte interferon- γ (IL-12) on human endometrial cells. The authors studied the effects of IL-12 on the expression and activation of caspase-3, caspase-8, caspase-9, caspase-3/7 and cytochrome c release in human endometrial cells. The rate of apoptosis, cell cycle arrest and DNA damage were analyzed by propidium iodide staining, flow cytometry and comet assay, respectively. Human leukocyte interferon- γ induced apoptosis, cell cycle arrest and DNA damage in human endometrial cells. Human leukocyte interferon- γ increased the expression of caspase-3 and caspase-9, but reduced the expression of caspase-8. Human leukocyte interferon- γ induced cytochrome c release from mitochondria. Human leukocyte interferon- γ increased the expression of Bcl-2. Human leukocyte interferon- γ also increased the expression of p53 and p21. Treatment with the caspase-3 inhibitor 1678ea919c
